

10 Reasons to Choose IWP

Because you have a profound concern for the security, safety, and prosperity of the Nation;

Because you want to learn to think strategically so as to detect and understand threats and political-strategic opportunities;

Because you want to know how to prevent, manage, mitigate, resolve, and prevail in international conflicts;

Because you want to be taught to use all the instruments of statecraft with logic, prudence, and ethics to find innovative and practical solutions to a multiplicity of threats and challenges;

Because you believe that when governments resort to force it is often a sign of a failure to effectively use the many non-military instruments of power

Because you, as a future leader, want to confront the world's realities and take seriously those things which threaten America and the causes of peace and justice around the world;

Because you want to learn from an experienced core of scholar-practitioners whose expertise will give you invaluable insight into the realities of how foreign policy and national security actually work;

Because you want to be successful in your career as a diplomat, military officer, intelligence analyst, policy analyst, peacemaker, political or military strategist, or scholar;

Because you feel called to serve a cause higher than yourself and you want IWP to help foster that calling; and

Because you want to know how and when to speak truth to power, to confront the realities of the world, and to protect those values which are most dear to our country.

If IWP is the choice for you, we welcome you to take the next step—be it an informal discussion, a meeting with a faculty member, or an open house—where you can experience first-hand the unique vocation we all share at The Institute of World Politics.
